

Abstract of the Disclosure

In an optical switch with a mirror, the inclination angle of which varies depending on an application voltage, a low-frequency signal is superimposed on the application voltage, and a low-frequency component is detected in output light reflected on the mirror. Then, an application voltage is increased/decreased based on the detected low-frequency component.

10